"Have you ever heard of Rudyard Kipling?"

"Of course I have, did you know that I was the best Kipler in our Rudyard?"

So it was that a squalid bunch of deadbeat hashers gathered in Mario's Rudyard North of Sukawati. Because it was a Rudyard all sorts of people came out of the Rudwork for the day including Splash, Nightjar (he should have been at home looking after his sick dog Nimrod (whose Rod hasn't been too Nim-ble of late), Bakso, Shaggy Dog, Slowcoach, etc, etc.

We were looking forward to a nice flat boring run on rice fields but no such luck this wekk. This bunch of hares had us up and down like a whoare's kecks, in and out of little valleys (I beg your pardon?), wading waist deep through rivers and towards the end we thought the site was "just round the next corner" for about an hour and a half!

Sorry but I have to admit it was a very good run and nice and long if you like it that way.

The run set off North, then East and dropped into a river We went South down the river for a while before eventually climbing out and heading East, past an old familiar site at a temple and across another river valley. We headed South for quite a way before starting Back West. We dropped back into the river valley wading through deep water and coming up under a large spectacular waterfall. We carried on West eventually meeting the short. The run improved both in terms of scenery and interest the further we went. We headed South again then turn back North through interesting broken country and then towards the end it turned east again before turning back West and to the site.

The run had its share of comedians with Goes Up stepping up to his thigh in mud in a paddy field, Whitebait did a bit of underwater research in the river and Jack Shit was seen heading off in the distance going the wrong way and pretending he wasn't looking for a shortcut.

A very good run hares, well done.

The hares had laid on food satay, very good soup, rice and all sorts of stuff. The run was long so the circle started fairly late and Made Tartar was on good form welcoming returners (above) plus Roberto Bolognani (he invented spaghetti didn't he) and Henni Van Kody (Buffalo Bill's wife).

Visitors were Jan Carlo, Vivian Bolognani, Icha, Dayu, Sangjaya and Sarah.

Virgins today were Wayan (not many of those around), Ketut (not many of those either) Martin, Rhys Jenkins, Mel Jenkins, Nana and Agit.

Achievers for the day were Fanny Wank who made up 50 runs and Goes down with 100 runs in paradise.

Our spiritual master of Welsh origin (Woodenpecker) welcomed his fellow countryman Rhys to join him in the circle and place his bollocks on a block of ice which he did. Nightjar was then called in to officially shrive him. Rhys is still looking for his shrunken withered sweetmeats and has been speaking with a high pitched voice ever since.

Another good day with Bali HHH 2.

On on
